

Timeline Entries

380,000 years after the Big Bang – First Atoms Form

The universe cooled enough for protons and electrons to join together, creating hydrogen and helium atoms. Light could finally travel freely.

100–200 million years after the Big Bang – First Stars Ignite

Gravity pulled together huge clouds of hydrogen and helium, forming the very first stars. These stars lit up the universe for the first time.

Timeline Entries (tracing)

380,000 years after the Big Bang -
First Atoms Form

The universe cooled enough for protons and electrons to join together, creating hydrogen and helium atoms. Light could finally travel freely.

100-200 million years after the Big Bang - First Stars Ignite

Gravity pulled together huge clouds of hydrogen and helium, forming the very first stars. These stars lit up the universe for the first time.